From my perspective, I prefer being anonymous. People tend to have some unhappiness in their daily interactions with their friends or strangers. They may want to let out their awful emotions through posting words online. However, when they do that, their names are known by every viewers. Thus, they likely cannot release their awful emotions through this approach.

If people are anonymous, they will not have that problem. They can express their feelings directly, which can greatly reduce their awful emotions. Meanwhile, it may cause some legal problems. Being anonymous, they will not be known when they talked about some illegal topics. Moreover, being anonymous will be the obstacle of finding the person talking to them.

In conclusion, there are advantages and disadvantages between using a real name and being anonymous. Using a real name will restrict your behaviors, but you can still express your feelings online. Although being anonymous seems perfect, it may cause legal concerns.
